He would tell the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Crittenden) and all other advocates and defenders of the system and those who cry themselves hoarse in attempting to throw the protection of the Constitution around it, that it is the desire of the republic that it should cease to exist. There is no city of refuge for it. Like an infernal assassin it has its knife drawn and threatening to drive it to the heart of the republic. We are bound to strike this monster, and gentlemen need not cry the Censtitution for its defense. It shall be said be slain in the name of my country and my God. He denied that slavery has any guarantee or recognition in the Constitution. He argued that it was their right and duty to destroy slavery, because slavery is destroying or will destroy the republic. He was in favor of the restoration of the Union with the right to stand on the American soil anywhere and proclaim his sentiments. He wanted to stand anywhere on American soil without the enforcement of a despotism to make him hold his tongue. He wanted to speak in South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi and Louisiana without the threat of lynching or coat of tar and feathers. The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Crittenden) asked what would four millions of slaves turned loose do? Turned loose? This term was used as if the slaves were wild beasts. Now he had this to sav, at present he would let them alone to take care of themselves, which they were abundantly able to do. The slaveholders had better turn their attention to another point, namely, what will they do when Join the column which leaves here this morning they cease to live on the unrequited sweat and to reinforce him. toil of the slaves.
